

DX Makes Sure That Property Developers Don't Get Hot Under The Collar 20 Jul 07

DX Cooling, an air conditioning company based in Central London tackles the new air conditioning regulations, F gas to make sure property developers / owners don't get hot under the collar.

This month new regulations come into force and details that air con units must be registered and maintained by a competent registered business.

DX Cooling, an air conditioning company based in Central London tackles the new air conditioning F Gas regulations, to make sure property developers don't get hot under the collar.

The F Gas legislation has come at a time where carbon emissions reduction is at top of the agenda with both UK government and the EU.

DX Cooling has been created to offer customers a lower carbon alternative and a competent after sales service.

Steve Allen, Managing Director explains "Clients will save in the long term with government initiatives setup to help companies claim up to 100% capital allowance on installations and benefit from significant lower running costs."

System prices start from as little as £1,600 and to celebrate the launch of DX Cooling we are offering a free I-Pod with every order placed between now and the end of August.

For more details on the recent F Gas legislation or how Cavendish can keep you cool this summer visit www.dxcooling.net or call 0207 3757145.
