Creative Communications

“When I enrolled at Hove College I had been at my job for three years – almost to the day.

I imagine the story is a familiar one, in an attempt to support myself financially at university I decided to work for a while to save money. A ‘while’ became six months, 1 year, 3 years – until I was a 22-year old woman with no real job prospects but an unrelenting urge to prove myself and have a reasonable bank balance. So what next...?

Well, the problem I had was deciding what would be right for me – a 3-4 year university slog, or a 6-month ‘quickie’. You will have to forgive the term ‘quickie’, but for me that was the clincher.

I had worked for a long time and was used to working hard but I did not want to risk four years of my life in a course that might not be right for me. After more than a little trepidation, I decided that it was going to be a case of now or never.

I am writing this one year later, literally to the day, of starting the Creative Communications Diploma course. I passed all my exams with high grades, I have a wonderful job that has allowed me to capitalise on practically every skill learnt at Hove College. Furthermore, I feel really confident about the future for the first time I can remember.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone at Hove College, especially the great friends I made and their continuing support.”
