Digital Design Diploma

Over the years, I had worked in a variety of jobs – publishing, English teaching, even temping in a call centre – but by the time I reached 40 years old, I felt unfulfilled in my daily career.

I had always been interested in design, and in particular working with language and words. So when I saw the courses advertised at Hove College for web and digital design, I knew not only would this be a stimulating way to spend six months of my life but, more importantly, I would be learning skills and gaining qualifications that would enable me to find a much more satisfying job.

Having now finished my retraining, I fully appreciate the wisdom of choosing to study at Hove. Initially I had been concerned that both my age and lack of industry experience would make finding a full-time position a challenging task. I am happy to report that I was offered a job as a trainee web designer in a small web and graphic design agency within a week of graduating from the college!

My profound thanks go to all the tutors and staff at Hove College for giving me the firm foundation to a new and rewarding career.
